

BECAUSE I SAID SO.

Eva has done her homework. Her mother hears backtalk.

Read the comic. Then make Eva's next move.

UNCLE RWAMITI: YOUR MOVE

BECAUSE I SAID SO.

01 Something worth showing

Katete, outside Mbarara. Eva, 16, has been learning digital illustration for months.

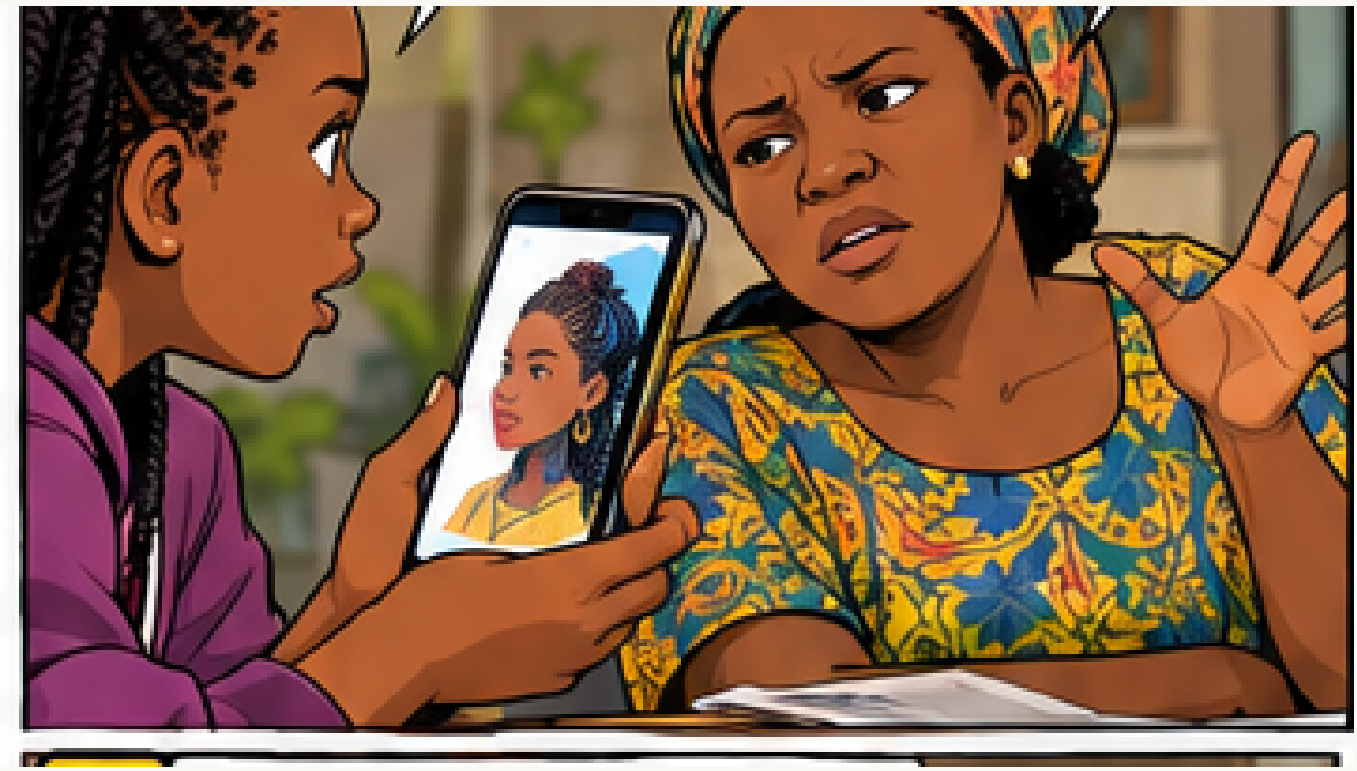

Mum: “Another day playing on a phone?”

Eva: “Mum, I made this.”

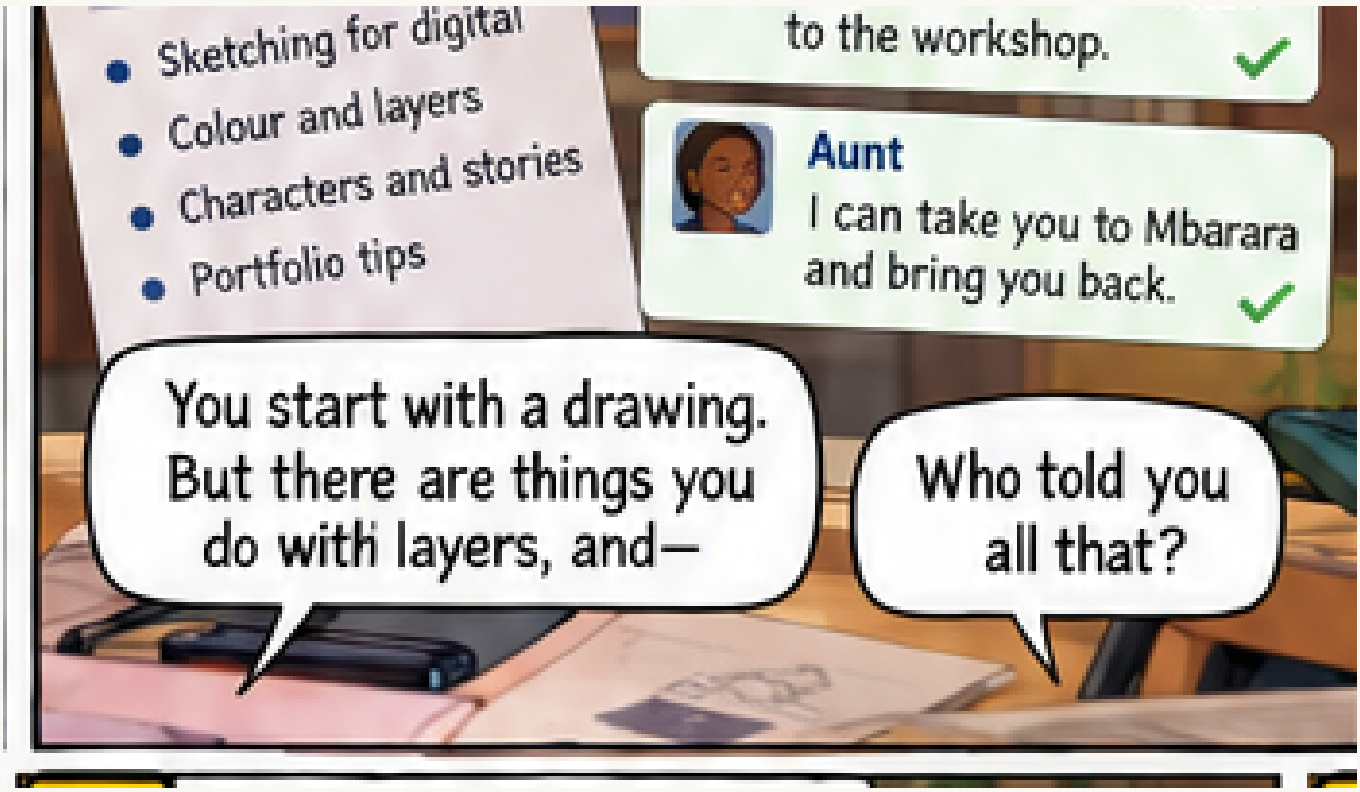

A Saturday workshop in Mbarara covers techniques she wants to learn. The phone reads: DIGITAL ILLUSTRATION WORKSHOP / SATURDAY / MBARARA.

Eva: “Mum, may I attend?”

Eva: “It’s digital illustration. You can use it for book covers, posters, animation—”

Mum: “Eva, drawing is drawing. Get a pencil.”

She has read the programme. Her teacher confirmed the invitation. Her aunt can take her and bring her home.

Eva: “You start with a drawing. But there are things you do with layers, and—”

Mum: “Who told you all that?”

Eva offers a demonstration of line drawing and colour layers. Mum pushes the phone back across the table.

Eva: “I’ve been learning. Let me show you.”

Mum: “I went to school before you were born.”

The workshop programme remains unread on the table.

Eva: “I know, Mum. But this is something I’ve been studying.”

Mum: “So now you know more than your mother?”

About many things, she did not. About this particular subject, she knew enough to explain.

The programme is still unread.

Eva: “Please just look.”

Mum: “No. Because I said so.”

The programme was still unread. Mum resumes her task. Eva remains seated. No one speaks.

Eva has something to say. What does she do next?

YOUR MOVE

Eva knows something her mother has not examined. Her explanation has been treated as disrespect. What does she do?

CHALLENGE HER DIRECTLY

“About this subject, I do know more. Please look before deciding.”

WITHDRAW

“Okay, Mum.” Put the phone away and stop explaining.

TRY TO KEEP THE CONVERSATION OPEN

“You can still guide me. Can I first show you what I’ve learned?”

Make your choice in the game.

PLAY BECAUSE I SAID SO.

After playing Eva’s story, you can also see Mum’s side.

Eva and her family are fictional. The workshop is also fictional.

UNCLE RWAMITI

The uncle your parents should probably never have introduced you to.
