MY SON DOES NOT WORK HERE

My son finished law last year. We're waiting for the right opening.

Tell him to send his CV.

Good afternoon.

David! Isn't this your boy?

My son does not work here. He's just helping someone.

I work here, Dad.

You told me you were doing something temporary.

But you're wearing a uniform.

It is temporary.

They don't give temporary people different clothes.

Joel! Table six!

My firm may need a junior. Tomorrow at ten is unusually free. Could you come?

Of course he'll come.

You can miss one morning.

I'm on shift.

I missed one last week for an interview.

JOEL

Then leave this place. We didn't pay for law school so you could carry plates.

Dad. Who do I tell my landlord is paying this month?

Say something.

Joel asked you a question.

YOUR MOVE

You are Joel. The interview is tomorrow at ten. Your shift starts at nine. You already missed one morning last week for another interview.

A. Ask your manager for another morning off. He covered your last absence himself.

B. Ask Grace for a different interview time. She has already said tomorrow morning is unusually free.

C. Ask your father to cover your rent if you lose the job. Ask him now, before everyone leaves.

Which conversation do you begin?
Choose A, B or C.
