1 Someone who leaves for work

Nora graduated four years ago. Every weekday, she leaves home before seven.

You'll be late.

They notice.

2 Useful at the office

Her three-month unpaid placement is ending on Friday.

Nora, please finish this before lunch.

We'd be lost without you.

9 No surprise offer

Friday afternoon.

There was no last-minute job offer.

All the best, Nora!

REFERENCE LETTER

Thank you.

Send us your updated CV. We'll keep it on file.

10 Monday

Monday morning.

Following up two applications. Then I need to work out what I can afford to keep trying.

What are you doing today?

I'm asking, Nora.

Shall we look at the transport money together?

REFERENCE LETTER

Monday was still uncertain.
This time, the cost was on the table.

SHE WAS WORKING. HER FAMILY WAS PAYING. THE JOB WAS STILL A POSSIBILITY.

Was leaving the right decision for Nora?
When can unpaid experience be worth its cost?
What would you need to know before accepting an extension?

We want to hear from both graduates and parents. You can discuss the story without naming your employer or exposing your family's finances.

Nora, her family and the workplace are fictional.
